Murielle Hogan-Lieske

People Observations

Reihe Fremdsprachen

Bestellnummer 07-004-128
About the writer

Murielle Hogan-Lieske was born and brought up in London. Having studied and taught there for several years, she specialised in teaching English as a foreign language. She moved to Germany and has enjoyed teaching at a German school. People have always fascinated her and she would have liked to photograph some of the people she encountered. However, this was not possible and instead she has written descriptions of them. She hopes to encourage readers to gain more sensitivity and insight into human behaviour. She believes that, living in a hectic world, it is important to slow down, to open one’s eyes and to become aware of what is going on around us.
Inhaltsverzeichnis

Preface ............................................................................................................. 5
People Observations ....................................................................................... 7
  People on the Underground ........................................................................ 7
  The Occupants of 124 Streathbourne Road ........................................... 8
  Mr. Saunders ......................................................................................... 9
  Marjorie ............................................................................................... 10
  Miss Hartwell ....................................................................................... 11
  Patrick .................................................................................................. 12
  Mark ....................................................................................................... 13
  Denis the Menace .................................................................................. 14
  Jessica ................................................................................................... 15
  A School Boy on the Underground ..................................................... 16
  Killian’s Priorities and Perspectives .................................................... 17
  The Woman on the Top Deck of the Bus ............................................ 18
  The Elderly Man in the Park ............................................................... 19
  The Woman With Too Much Gold Jewellery ..................................... 20
  The Friendly Waiter ............................................................................. 21
  The Commuter ..................................................................................... 22
  The Old Man on the Bench .................................................................. 23
  An Old Lady on an Industrial Estate .................................................. 24
  Aunt Hanni .......................................................................................... 25
  Fashionable People ............................................................................... 26
  Tom, Dick and Harry! ........................................................................... 27
  Corinna in her Dilemma ....................................................................... 28
  Prayers in the Russian Orthodox Church ........................................... 29
  The Church-Goers ............................................................................. 30
  A Person of Habit ................................................................................ 31
  The Gypsies on the Tram .................................................................... 32
  The Beauty in the Biergarten ............................................................... 33
  Myriam ................................................................................................. 34
  A Turkish Acquaintance ....................................................................... 35
  Tante Helene ....................................................................................... 36
  Madame Rousset .................................................................................. 37
  A Dog In Her Life ................................................................................ 38
  The Canal Boatman in Bruges ............................................................ 39
  The Unknown Singer .......................................................................... 40
  The Lorry Driver from Chernobyl ....................................................... 41
  Julie .................................................................................................... 42
Barbara in Love ....................................................................................... 43
Alison, the Freelance Artist ..................................................................... 44
The Afro-Scot .......................................................................................... 45
The Young Man from Zimbabwe ............................................................ 46
The Young Woman From Mali ............................................................... 47
Lucky Louise ........................................................................................... 48
Young, Enterprising People ................................................................. 49
The Homeless .......................................................................................... 50
The Mega Manager .................................................................................. 51
Sally, the Secretary .................................................................................. 52
The Ice cream Man on the Island of Lanzarote ....................................... 53
Three young ladies on the Beach ............................................................. 54
The Importance Of A Mobile .................................................................. 55
The Snorkeller ......................................................................................... 56
The Little Boy On Holiday ...................................................................... 57
Throwing Everything On The Floor! ....................................................... 58
The Little Girl in Pink ............................................................................. 59
Brother and Sister .................................................................................... 60
Forgotten .................................................................................................. 61
The Four Year Old African Boy .............................................................. 62
The Four Year-Old Boy and his Grandmother ........................................ 63
The Young Woman on the Pavement ...................................................... 64
Life Philosophy Of A Down And Out ..................................................... 65
Sylvia ....................................................................................................... 66
Preface

Many people keep diaries and write down everything in detail or simply make notes. Throughout the years I have made a list of the main events in my life and I have not bothered to keep a diary. However, while I was living and teaching in London, I started to write descriptions of people I encountered or observed around me or when I was on holiday. These observations have given me food for thought.

There are various ways of studying these observations. One could simply take each description separately, concentrating on reading and pronunciation practice, answering the questions, using one’s own words and improving the use of vocabulary for discussion. However, if one wants to practise writing in one’s own words, one could answer the questions first before oral work is done. Grammar, such as the use of tenses, adjectives and adverbs, prepositions and phrasal verbs could be introduced or revised by using the examples in the descriptions.

If one prefers to work on a project, then various observations could be used to fit in with a certain topic. One could choose, for example, travelling on public transport, jobs, school education in England, holidays, religion, lifestyles or social problems. Fashion, strange or unusual people, Africa, human behaviour or people from other countries could also be dealt with.

These are just a few ideas and I do hope everyone will be inspired to write their own observations.
People on the Underground

Tooting Bec to Tottenham Court Road,
Balham to Baker Street,
Fulham Broadway to Finsbury Park,
Piccadilly to Paddington,
Heathrow to Harrow.

Travelling by London Underground is fascinating.

People, people, people in the underground.
People in rush hours, people in off-peak periods.
People sitting in a row opposite you.
People, all so different, all so fascinating.

Faces, expressions, fashions that cannot be captured in a fleeting moment.

A camera would only change everything and people would put artificial smiles on their faces. Therefore only the memory remains and lingers on.

---

Comprehension and Discussion:

1. Why is travelling by London Underground so fascinating?
2. Why is it difficult to photograph people in the Underground?
3. Do you have any contact to people you see on the bus or train?
4. If you wanted to start a conversation with a person, how would you go about it?
5. How do people pass their travelling-time?
The Occupants of 124 Streathbourne Road

Mr. Saunders was my landlord and I lived on the first floor.
The house was full of music
which you heard now and again at the front door.
There was the sound of jazz on the first floor.
I put on my record player and listened to jazz.
Mr. Saunders put his radio on and conducted classics.
Marjorie put Flamenco on and danced for her cats.
The house was full of music.
Every time I had visitors, we heard Mr. Saunders concert.
Every time I had visitors, Marjorie danced for us.
Now living in Düsseldorf, my friends ask me:
“Do you remember that mad house?”

Comprehension and Discussion:

1. Why could 124 Streathbourne Road be described as a lively house?
2. Is it annoying to hear music coming from another flat?
3. What role does music play in your life?
4. What effects can music have on people?
Mr. Saunders

Mr. Saunders was my landlord and had some rather strange habits.
When it came to making tea, he would boil some milk in a saucepan, add tea leaves to it, place the tea strainer over his mug and pour the milky tea into it. Having drunk that milky tea, he would proceed into his sitting room, put on his classical music programme on his radio and stand there and conduct it. His door was left open, so his tenants knew he was concentrating on his overture and didn’t want to be disturbed. Mr. Saunders had some really strange habits.

Comprehension and Discussion:

1. Why was Mr Saunders a strange person?
2. Is it a good idea to live in a house where the landlord or landlady lives?
3. Do people, living in high-rise buildings, get to know each other?
4. Would you like to live in a flat or a house?
5. If you lived on your own in a rented flat, what costs would you have every month?
Marjorie

Marjorie was Mr. Saunders’ niece and lived at the top of the house.
She was over fifty and had spent many years in Spain doing Flamenco dancing at a Spanish night club.
Clickety-click, how the years had passed.
Clickety-click, she was back in London.
Clickety-click, she wanted to forget her arthritis.
Her five cats enjoyed the Flamenco music.
We enjoyed the Flamenco music every day.
She always played her castanets.
Clickety-click. At seven o’clock in the morning, she went down to get the milk bottles.
Clickety-click. At eight o’clock he went down to see if the postman had been there.
Clickety-click was her greeting and she danced her life away.

Comprehension and Discussion:

1. Why could Marjorie be described as being eccentric?
2. What are the advantages and disadvantages of having relatives living in the same house?
3. Would you like to live on the ground floor or at the top of a house?
4. Why do young people want to leave home as soon as possible?
5. What do you think of men over thirty still living with their mother?
Miss Hartwell

Miss Hartwell was the mathematics teacher for our first year at grammar school.
She was tall, hearty and horsey.
She had a big mouth and a fine set of teeth.
She talked a lot and spat a lot.
Those sitting in the front row would have liked to put up their umbrellas.
When she came round to help you, she sat on half of your chair and you had to learn to balance.
She was tall, hearty and horsey.
She was a good teacher and we all got good marks.

Comprehension and Discussion:

1. Why was Miss Hartwell a bit strange?
2. What were her positive points?
3. Could you describe a teacher at your last school?
4. Do teachers have an easy time at school?
5. What makes a good teacher?